Abuse and Healing in The Book of Mormon, Volume 2: Jacob - Mosiah S. Evan Rice

Lessons of scripture outline God's deliverance from all forms of abuse, both the abuse of self and the abuse of others, both intergenerational abuse and interpersonal abuse, through the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Such faith-based deliverance from abuse is, first and last, both personal and transformational; its conversion power is first felt on the inside and then seen on the outside, as we learn in passages from the Book of Jacob to the Book of Mosiah in The Book of Mormon. Most importantly, the Nephites had demonstrated how faith in Christ could bring to a nation steady progression from a willingness to follow prophets into the wilderness (Jacob), repentance (Enos), conversion (Amaleki), consecration (Benjamin), sanctification (Limhi), and transformative faith (Alma Jr.). Through this cleansing of the inner vessel, a nation of faith in Jesus Christ was born.
